The aim of this study was to present our experience with open reduction and internal fixation of displaced and comminuted supracondylar fractures of the humerus were treated with open reduction and internal fixation. We retrospectively reviewed the medical records of children with supracondylar fractures who were treated with open reduction and internal fixation in our clinic from 2004 to 2010. Closed reduction in one patients had open reduction in one patient was stabilized with a cannulated plate and screws. The average follow-up period was 32 months (range: 24-52 months). Closed reduction in one patient was unsuccessful, and open reduction was performed. Complete bone healing was achieved in 13 patients after an average time of 28 weeks. Two patients with a displaced and comminuted supracondylar fractures of the humerus can be successfully performed with good results. On this episode we're gonna go through a bunch of typical server deployment headaches with Kubernet
