Uhhh, what? Or do I just need the.A rep for Abrams' company, Bad Robot, responded to the new leak with a posted statement. "Bad Robot is a company run by filmmakers, for filmmakers," the statement said. "We have always and continue to distribute films made by filmmakers. We do not comment on the personal lives of our filmmakers or their projects and certainly never think it is our place to." That response came after the hacker who first leaked the information for the movie also posted another letter on his blog Monday. "The right to free speech is not a right to libel people," the letter said. "For instance, if I were to publish a list of all the directors of the Star Wars movies and then declare that those directors committed genocide — you can damn well imagine the outrage and outcry. If a large group of people make such a statement, it's libel. If a person does it as a private citizen, it's not libel, it's a matter of opinion." He then adds, "No one knows how many people have been hurt by this. The people involved are very famous. One of the people on the list (and yes, I'm naming names) is a very close friend. It is an unbearable situation." Abrams has spoken out before on the subject, telling The Hollywood Reporter's Peter Sciretta that, "there is good
