The problem is when I deploy my website in the server, and click on the button that fetches data from database and display the data in form, the problem is that the data from the database was not updated and only the data that was filled when I clicked on the button from my computer was updated (I tried to rerun my project in Debug mode and there was no update). Did any one faced this kind of problem? A: If it's a web application, you need to make sure that in the configuration properties of the web site, the database connections are allowed to connect to localhost. For example, in the configuration file, check the Allow Remote Connections box, and type in the hostname of your server in the IP address field. When you click the button, VS 2015 connects to the host by default, and not to the server on your local machine. The future of diabetes care is as clear as the writing on the wall: Computer decision support will be a cornerstone of the future of diabetes care. The role of the physician in the future of diabetes care will be far more than that of the dictating scribe. Computer decision support (CDS) systems will replace both the disease management and the physician's role as the primary decision maker in the future of diabetes care. Physicians must become more like their patients. They must become more like their patients by being "expert" with their decision making, and must provide the same kind of analysis that their patients provide to them. Patients' health information literacy will change as their use of technology increases. This transition will change how physicians practice medicine in the future. The goals of CDS will be to support physicians in assessing the medical information and the implications for a particular patient. CDS must be able to follow patients, explain the findings and their implications, and interpret the available evidence to patients.
