Chronic myelogenous leukemia is characterized by the presence of the Philadelphia chromosome, which contains the bcr/abl fusion gene. The transforming activity of bcr/abl is due in part to a large increase in cellular levels of cAMP. We have examined the effect of increasing concentrations of cAMP on the transcription rate of acyl-CoA hydrolase, a gene that is regulated by adenovirus E1A. Multiple cAMP response elements were identified in the 5'-flanking region of the acyl-CoA hydrolase gene. Two cAMP-dependent increases in transcription were observed; one was mediated by cAMP-dependent protein kinase and the other was independent of cAMP-dependent protein kinase. The latter was activated by beta-adrenergic receptor agonists and was mediated by cAMP, cGMP, and Ca²⁺. cAMP-dependent activation was not observed in HeLa cells transfected with an adenovirus E1A expression vector, suggesting that this pathway is specific to the bcr/abl fusion gene product and may play an important role in the pathogenesis of the disease. Updates in the diagnosis and management of asthma in pregnancy. Maternal asthma is associated with significant maternal and infant morbidity and mortality; nonetheless, there is significant underdiagnosis and undertreatment. The Women's Health and Illness Translation Studies Group (WHISTLES), an international research consortium, was formed to examine asthma care. We aim to provide an up-to-date, evidence-based overview of asthma in pregnancy with an emphasis on advances in diagnosis and treatment. A MEDLINE search (1966 to April 2008) was performed for relevant articles and reviews on diagnosis, maternal morbidity, gestational asthma and management of asthma during pregnancy. Asthma is often underdiagnosed in pregnancy. In the primary care setting, clinical practice guidelines recommend that women with asthma who are pregnant undergo preconception counseling. Use of high-sensitivity and exhaled nitric oxide assessment may improve asthma management during pregnancy. Increasing access to patient education and individualized self-management plans for women with asthma who become pregnant may improve maternal
