

Plot Jat, a young headstrong man, likes to tell stories to the local school children, stories of ghost and monsters. He knows of a secret door in the old house belonging to his ancestors and is convinced there are monsters living within. One day, he is invited to the burial site of his ancestors and is told that his ancestors were not just poor farmers, but were also witches and demons. This is due to the inheritance of the house that had been passed on for generations and then sold out to a widow who was married to a rich farmer, but she turned out to be a demon and died at the age of 30, which proves how powerful the ancient demons are. His life is upset when he sees a ghost on a bridge which is reported to have appeared during the annual ghost hunting festival. He is told that the ghost was a monk who used to live in the area and was killed by a demon. He attempts to chase the ghost, but he ends up getting injured. His aunt comes to the hospital and tries to convince him to put a curse on the ghost, but he refuses to do so. However, he believes that his family curse the ghost to appear every year on the same day of the festival. As the festival arrives, Jat is outside the door when he hears a high pitched sound which scares him and he runs inside the house, but he is trapped by a demon, who knocks him out cold. He wakes up tied up with a knife at his neck, and with a bloody knife by his side and tied up in a chair. He hears the sound of the horn and screams for help. He hears his aunt scream and the demon gets inside the house as well. As he tries to get untied, he sees a shadow, which he first believes to be the ghost again. However, it is revealed to be a demon instead and starts attacking him. He runs out the back door to the shed, where he finds his aunt tied up as well. They both attempt to free themselves but are unable to untie the knots and can only watch in horror as the demon stabs them in the back repeatedly. Jat eventually gets free and tries to flee the shed, but is cornered by the demon, who chases him around. As he escapes through the door, he runs into a young girl named Hope. The demon tries to attack her, but she runs out and hides in the shed. The demon eventually gives up and goes back inside. Jat manages to
