Biological therapy for atopic dermatitis. Atopic dermatitis (AD) has become one of the most common chronic childhood diseases in developed countries. Cyclosporine, tacrolimus, and omalizumab are potent immunosuppressants used for severe AD, and they improve the condition in approximately one third of patients. Severe cases, in particular, benefit. They have side effects, however, including gum hypertrophy, elevation of serum liver enzymes, and renal dysfunction. Asthma is one of the comorbidities of AD. Inhaled corticosteroids are used to suppress the inflammation in the lungs of patients with asthma. The American College of Allergy, Asthma and Immunology (ACAAI) Expert Committee recommends the use of topical steroids and calcineurin inhibitors, not only in severe AD, but also in mild to moderate disease. Oral steroids are used only for the severe disease and acute phase of AD. In refractory or acute severe AD, SCORAD scores can be reduced by intravenous methylprednisolone combined with cyclosporine. Newer biological agents, particularly omalizumab, are promising for severe and/
