USA ACENumerical Modeling Meep Software Inc. has developed the latest software for numerical modeling of antennas and circuits. The powerful new features of the Meep modeling software are particularly well suited to building new antenna designs and help cell phone antenna designers perform the most challenging design tasks. The next-generation antenna modeling software (Meep) has been continuously improved over the last decade. It now supports magnetics-based simulation of antennas. The significantly improved accuracy of the antenna model under the new approach is demonstrated by a number of figures. Among these are the plate-loading antennas and helical antennas in which Meep provides a significant speed up (reduction of more than 20%) over previous Meep versions. The improved accuracy of the Meep model for slot antennas is demonstrated in a new figure in which the Meep simulation is compared to the exact solution. The use of Meep for the development of new slot antenna designs will be discussed. The simulation of integrated circuits by meshing, where the modules are divided into cells and the current in a module is then routed to mesh points, has been greatly extended and improved. The use of Meep to model high-Q resonance circuits is illustrated by the comparison of experimental and simulated results on a microstrip patch-resonator circuit. Finally, the steady-state solver has been improved, allowing larger meshes to be solved in less time and offering convergence to the true solution to much higher precision.), Anno Domini, but to escape this forecast the union stopped at Nicaca. The desire to keep the worship of the graven images, can still be seen in Orthodox Christianity. While the Orthodox Church accepts all existing images as being "icons", the images of angels, saints, or prophets that were exposed to the public gaze in the Middle Ages are considered
