The present invention generally relates to a method and apparatus for optimally utilizing processing resources of a radio frequency (RF) transceiver having a transmit/receive filter. More specifically, the present invention is directed to a method and apparatus for adaptively utilizing processing resources of a RF transceiver of a device capable of executing functions associated with a plurality of communication systems and protocols in accordance with one or more of a plurality of transmit/receive filters. The present invention is further directed to a radio frequency (RF) transceiver configured to selectively execute functions associated with one or more communication systems and protocols using a number of transmit/receive filters based on the available processing resources and/or communication system requirements. Conventional wireless communication systems typically provide for increased system performance through use of a plurality of transmit/receive filters that can be used to augment communication bandwidth and communication data rates. Each transmit/receive filter is used to select a particular type of communication protocol or a particular frequency band of interest for communication and can be tuned to operate over a desired portion of a wireless communication spectrum. A transmit/receive filter is typically provided by a dedicated memory device included within a RF transceiver. This dedicated memory device is typically not shared with other functional units of the RF transceiver.
