The group, which is better known by the acronym ISIS, has repeatedly threatened attacks in Britain and President Barack Obama is expected to address the issue when he holds a summit with world leaders next week. The man who reportedly beheaded Haines appeared at the Old Bailey in London on Friday and pleaded guilty to murder and waging war against the United Kingdom. The man, whose identity is protected under Article 26 of the European Convention on Human Rights, said he and another member of ISIS had first captured Haines in Syria and moved him to Raqqa, the de facto ISIS capital in Syria, in early 2014. According to the Telegraph, the group later demanded that the British government pay £20 million ($27 million) as a ransom for the aid worker's release. The Telegraph also said the man was arrested in the first days of July but then handed over to his family and flown to another country for medical treatment before being taken back to the UK to face the charges. The group has carried out several attacks in Iraq since it declared a caliphate in the summer of 2014 and subsequently also spread to Syria. British security forces have also suffered a number of casualties. A wave of arrests and detentions have taken place following the group's declaration in Syria but intelligence agencies have reportedly been wary of co-operating as they have not had the support
