Characterization of bovine lactoferrin by SDS-PAGE and multiple sequence alignments. Lactoferrin is a multifunctional protein with the biological activity of binding avidly to iron, inhibiting growth of a number of pathogenic bacteria, and scavenging various toxic compounds. The aim of this study was to characterize bovine lactoferrin (BLF) by characterizing its size, charge, and structure. Size exclusion chromatography and isoelectric focusing were performed to characterize the molecular size and isoelectric point of BLF, and reversed-phase high-performance liquid chromatography was used to determine molecular charge. On SDS-PAGE, BLF showed a single band of iron-free apo-BLF with a molecular mass of about 77 kDa, and BLF added with Fe(3+) showed a second band of holo-BLF with a molecular mass of around 92 kDa. BLF appears to be a monomer. MALDI-TOF mass spectrometry showed that the molecular mass of apo-BLF was about 80.3 kDa, and that of holo-BLF was about 92.8 kDa. On the other hand, ESI-TOF/MS showed that BLF has the same amino-acid sequence in both apo- and holo-form. The amino-acid sequence of the N-terminal BLF was determined by sequencing its proteolytic products. The C-terminal BLF was then analyzed by MALDI-TOF/TOF mass spectrometry. BLF of bovine origin was inferred to be a mixture of holo-BLF and apo-BLF. Further characterization of bovine lactoferrin is important to understand its multifunctional action, e.g. its ability to bind to iron and inhibit growth of pathogenic bacteria.
