The goal of this phase I study was to determine the dose-limiting toxicity and recommended phase II dose of irinotecan (CPT-11) in combination with cisplatin (CDDP) and intraperitoneal (IP) oxaliplatin (L-OHP) in patients with advanced gastric cancer or colorectal cancer. The patients received weekly CPT-11 and CDDP with a fixed 5-day intermittent infusion of L-OHP. The starting dose of CPT-11 was 65 mg/m(2) intravenously (IV), and the dose escalation of CDDP and L-OHP was 30-60 mg/m(2) IV and

50-70 mg/m(2) IP, respectively. All patients were evaluated for toxicity and response. Fifteen patients received more than one cycle of CPT-11 and CDDP. The total number of cycles was 106 (median, 3). Common side effects were neutropenia (82%), diarrhea (67%), nausea/vomiting (67%), and asthenia (53%). The overall response rate was 67% (6/9) in gastric cancer and 33% (1/3) in colorectal cancer. The major toxicities in the study were hematologic. The recommended phase II dose of CPT-11 is 50 mg/m(2) IV and 50 mg/m(2) IP for CDDP and L-OHP, respectively, with repeated weekly administration.Single-molecule fluorescence spectroscopy of membrane proteins is a developing and powerful tool for investigating the dynamics of these proteins, which are often implicated in many diseases. Since their discovery, single-molecule tools have been used to investigate membrane protein function in diverse scenarios, including the formation and organization of lipid rafts, interactions between membrane proteins, and the lateral diffusion and partitioning of membrane proteins in and out of membrane domains. Nonetheless, a fundamental understanding
