Q: jQuery current date format Can anyone tell me how to get the current date format with only one date selector. As if I do the following it takes one of the default date format, but I want the current date format. var date = new Date(); var formattedDate = date.getDate()+" "+date.getMonth()+" "+date.getFullYear(); A: I would use Date.now() to get the current date and use moment.js to format it. var moment = require('moment'); var now = moment(); var formattedDate = now.format('YYYY-MM-DD'); moment is an excellent date/time library and will do what you need with minimum hassle. Docs here: A: You can also use momentjs to get the current date format, and the library's format function. // e.g. console.log(moment().format('LLLL, D-MMM-YYYY')); There is also moment-duration-format which formats the duration in a human friendly way. // e.g. console.log(moment().duration({months: 2}).format('M(-MM)')); A: If you use moment.js: var date = new Date(); var formatDate = moment().format('MM-DD-YYYY');

Its rich set of features makes this utility a powerful tool for both system administrators and ordinary users. KEYMACRO has a simple and straightforward interface with a dockable status bar that keeps you always in touch with what you are doing. The application offers a keyboard-to-keystroke conversion wizard, allowing you to create custom keystrokes for any application or program. The generated keyboard shortcut is completely customizable, with options like different modifier keys, and an option to either add a system-wide shortcut, or create a private one. When creating a custom shortcut, you can choose to start a new instance of the program or an existing instance that is already running. This is particularly useful when you want to control several programs in one go, and start up all of them from one shortcut. To record a single keystroke, you can either use a simple shortcut or generate a temporary one. The first keystroke is automatically copied to the clipboard for you to paste into your document. You can modify it from within the shortcut by clicking on the Edit button. KEYMACRO comes with a convenient way to customize key commands. Besides changing key names, you can also alter the function of the command by assigning a shortcut to a modifier key like Ctrl, Alt, or the Windows Key. You can also associate a shortcut key to a different keystroke. To save time, you can save the key configurations to a plain text file, or a KeePass database. KEYMACRO also features a keystroke logger. This feature allows you to see a log of all the keystrokes you make, to make sure you didn't miss anything. It can be disabled from the main settings, or through the Log Settings tab. The KeePass file format is supported, and the log file can be updated from within the program. Keystrokes are stored in plain text format, and can be searched using regular expressions. You can export the log to a CSV file and import it into any spreadsheet program.
