Tendencies towards the use of surrogate measures in the analysis of geographic variation in suicide rates: a note on age and sex. An analysis is made of the effects on the age and sex patterns of suicide rates of the use of different categories of "proxy" measures for the factor "religion". The proxy measures are ethnicity, levels of unemployment, housing quality, social class, and foreign nationals. When the "religion" rate is assumed to be a factor whose effects are summarized in age-specific measures of "proxy" rates, the association between "proxy" rate and suicide rates is lost. The artificial association between "proxy" rates and suicide rates is produced by the choice of age-specific "proxy" rates. Changes in the age-specific "proxy" rates are shown to have the effect of redistributing suicides from older to younger age groups and from female to male. The use of a proxy rate gives far too much emphasis to these redistributive effects of age and sex. nd country to have compulsory military service is Germany, so there's a good chance they have a higher rate of suicide as well. In Austria, and Switzerland and Italy, soldiers aren't compelled to serve but are required to do so if called up and failure to do so is punished with jail time. Yes, the guys on duty, but they are still not compelled, so it doesn't really count in this comparison. Also, Germany requires soldiers to do 3 years of active duty. While these soldiers are essentially slaves, they don't actually get killed.
