[Removal of oil from oily wastewater by natural biological flocculent]. A laboratory experiment of oil emulsion wastewater treatment by natural biological flocculent was investigated to optimize the operation parameters. The results showed that chemical oxygen demand (COD), anmonia nitrogen, total phosphorous and total nitrogen removals in the system were 95.0%, 94.9%, 99.4% and 96.0% respectively. The diameter, settling velocity of flocs, and pH were all the important factors in oil flocculent process, which were chosen to optimize the operation parameters. When the operation parameters levels of diameter, settling velocity of flocs had the close relationship with the oil removal efficiency, and floc diameter had less effect on the oil removal.
