Year's Eve party that went horribly wrong. The 16-year-old boy sparked an emergency response during a party in Aldershot, Hampshire, when he used an antique gun to shoot off 20 fireworks at a pizza restaurant. The boy was sent to court in Farnham, Surrey, where he pleaded guilty to five counts of making an imitation firearm, four counts of setting off an explosive without lawful authority and possession of an imitation firearm with intent to endanger life. Police responding to the incident said the boy, who cannot be named due to his age, "was remanded in custody, further action will be taken". The court heard that the teenager was attending a party when he brought along the gun. Police said he was handed the gun and was told to make sure he was "OK" when the fireworks were fired off. The incident unfolded on 1 January when a group of friends and family were gathered in a house at Bay Tree Road, Aldershot, for a New Year's Eve party. The 16-year-old's father, who can also not be named, told the court he had gone to bed shortly after midnight and was woken at 1.30am by his son telling him that the fireworks had gone off. "I asked why and he told me they were going off in the house and they were blowing up the house," the father said. "I asked him, 'Were they all OK?' And he said, 'No, one of them, the one that had gone off, was still there and he was in the kitchen.'"
