Salivary duct carcinoma of the soft palate is an extremely rare neoplasm. We report a rare case of SDC of the soft palate in a 46-year-old woman. She was admitted to the hospital with complaints of a painless growth in the left oral cavity. Computed tomography (CT) revealed a tumor mass lesion in the left side of the hard and soft palates. The tumor showed no evidence of invasion to the surrounding tissues and bone. Endoscopic nasopharyngectomy was performed. We performed postoperative examination of the patients. The tumor was located just in the incision line of the tumor. As histopathologic examinations showed squamous cell carcinoma and an immunohistochemical examination revealed CK-, EMA-, and CEA-positive, we concluded the diagnosis of SDC. The patient had no recurrence during the follow-up period of 2 months. Although the biology of SDC is still unclear, it is supposed that the local invasion of the tumor is derived from salivary glands and its lymphatic and hematogenous metastasis from the salivary
