It's been a while since I've posted on the forums, and for that I'm sorry. It's mainly because I have been too busy with school, work and the like. My intentions were to get better at writing and posting on the forums. I never thought I would be so lazy as to keep puttering around. Anyways, the new semester was starting and I needed to find a way to stay organized and productive during that time. It's tough to study and work all day and then come home and study or work even more. So, what do I do? Well, I found a superbly developed system from HP that's entirely customizable and will give you an exact timetable on how you will be spending your time. But that's not even the best part. HP has built this system on the same engine that is used in their laptops, meaning it is very efficient and will not drain your battery. And as a final note, the whole system costs only $100.00, and it's the perfect tool for the perfect time. If you would like to try the system and see how it works for yourself, please check out the link below: www.hp.com b7e8fdf5c8

TinyKlok is a short, handy application that shows the time in the form of a nice dot on the system tray. It fills the system tray with a small dot which shows the time, right next to the battery indicator and other system icons. It displays the time in an easy to read way and is easy to spot. What's more, with the help of the context menu, users can customize the appearance of the application and set it to always show on the tray and only in one of three states: On top of the tray, below the tray or by default. The customization panel includes an opacity slider for users to customize the look of the notification. The advanced panel includes the possibility to set a secondary theme, which will make the application flash by changing the color of the dot from red to green when new files are available. Users can also adjust the opacity of the notification. Moreover, the application can be added as a shortcut to the Start menu, and can be disabled from the tray menu. At the time of writing, TinyKlok is not available on Windows Store, though it's easily downloadable for free. 40.5 38.7 128.5 32.0 Windows 10 Icon Pack TinyKlok A minimalistic and lightweight time tracker Sep 4, 2017 Written by Ziviani Cúchois TinyKlok is a simple, lightweight application that acts as a time tracker that has a very simple look and feel. It is easy to spot and navigate and does not need any kind of setup, meaning you can take it with you on a thumb drive or portable storage device and always have the option to check the time when you need it. It adds a nice looking dot to the system tray, showing the time and also providing the possibility to create alerts, which are reminders that you need to do something at a specific time. One of the alerts is for downloads, informing you when the download has finished and shows a short message so you know exactly when you have to do something. A notification popup pops up in case an alert is created and is a great way to make users aware of upcoming deadlines. The notifications show all that information in a very minimalistic way. If you don't need the dot, you can go to settings and set it to not show by default, so you don't have to waste any space.
