Many of the basics of image editing are covered by the free, but powerful, gimp image editor, which is a part of the GNU project and is based on Open Graphics Library (OpenGL). Check the Resize option if you want to reduce the size of the image so that it fits on your screen. Figure 1. Enter the size of the image. To select an image from your desktop, click Open. Otherwise, choose New from the Select menu, and navigate to the image you want to use. To preview the image, click the Open button again. A preview of the image should display. If there is no preview of the image, click the OK button to close the dialog box. Otherwise, click the Cancel button. You can always use the Print function to preview the image, which is covered in the next section. Once the preview is displayed, select a color for your background by clicking on the Color Palette. If you're not sure how a photo will look, it's a good idea to use the Image Color Picker to select a color for your background. To choose the color of your text, select Text Color and click OK. Now you need to select your font. Click the Font Picker button, select a font from the list and click OK. You can use the Font Size setting to manually alter the size of your font. You can even use a predefined font, such as Symbols or

What's New in the?

, for sure. One of my friends who was a street performer found out the hard way. When he did the Samus Aran "Ghostbusters" thing for a fan, he got that one grifter who wanted to take a picture with him and ask for a $20 to help get the picture made. You get a free Nikon, but you need to buy the guy's coffee at the coffee shop. Every day. For a year. And you look in the news and see he has a black eye and you think, "Hey, that's great. He made it, he is a real performer." For a while, anyway. Until the end of the year and we found out he had been selling the pictures on the street for a lot of money. You hear about people doing the same thing with "Star Wars" toys, but this is the first time I've heard of someone actually selling a picture of a live performer." "To me, it's that huge contrast between those two worlds. One has Samus Aran, Luke Skywalker, Harrison Ford and the rest with all their acclaim and history, and the other is a guy who's been doing this for eight years, running on fumes and trying to earn a living." Naturally, fans don't always agree with Henderson's assessment of Street Performance comics. Many believe that Henderson has prejudged and doesn't understand the craft. "I go to shows and nobody sells anything but pictures and I think that's it," says one comic. "It happens to be what he's known for, and that's who people come to see, so of course they're going to see that," says another. "If everybody does that, you wouldn't have much of a market for anything else," says a third. Henderson readily admits that he's not a comic. He's a photographer and shows his artwork at the Smithsonian next week, but he doesn't necessarily know what he's talking about. "I'm not a comic. I just support them," he says, and then shoots off several questions. "Is a comic a musician? Or is a musician a comic?" Then, he takes off. Besides, he says, a good street performer never stops moving. Never takes a day off. And when he does, he hasn't left his marks. "You just didn't go to the same place as yesterday, not even for a
