My question is - how should I go about handling a MySQL database? Do I just create a ConnectionString and return it upon each query? How should I be implementing the queries? I.E. "Select * From Names;" Thanks A: I would suggest starting with a DB First approach - that is to say, if you have a fairly simple project going, define a DAL which contains the query methods (basically, just a wrapper to MySqlCommand) which will be used for all your querying. This will take care of your infrastructure, and should also simplify your life. Now, the actual querying (libraries like LINQ to SQL are very helpful), the data access objects do not have to be tied to any specific database, as the
