Imaging and biomechanical studies of hemodialysis access stenosis using a novel catheter-based imaging technique: correlation with translesional pressure gradients. The translesional pressure gradient (TPG) is commonly used to assess vascular access (VA) hemodynamics. This retrospective study examined imaging of stenosis using a novel catheter-based imaging technique. The VA and collaterals were evaluated in 39 patients (72 VA), who had undergone digital subtraction angiography (DSA) and duplex ultrasound (DU) at the time of VA angioplasty. Angiography was technically suboptimal in 23 (59%) cases. The TPG and stenotic diameter were measured using DSA, and stenoses were classified as mild (TPG 15 mm Hg, >50% reduction of diameter). Sensitivity, specificity, positive and negative predictive values for detecting hemodynamically significant stenosis (TPG >15 mm Hg) were calculated. DU was used to determine degree of stenosis (>50%), peak systolic velocity (PSV), arteriovenous (AV) compliance index (C(A-V)) and vascular resistance index (RI), and lesions were classified into mild stenosis, moderate stenosis and occlusion. The mean TPG was 27 +/- 14 mm Hg (range 3-59), and TPG >15 mm Hg was detected in 26 (72%) cases. DSA/DU had a sensitivity of 81% and a specificity of 79% for detecting TPG >15 mm Hg. DU and DSA were also concordant in 48 (84%) cases. DSA detected more stenotic lesions than DU (71 vs.
