Modulation of the lateralization of the traditional human self. We present a new account of human subjectivity by treating it as a modulating process, which accounts for our being both the active and passive subject, as the force of our will, and as the object of our perceptions. Through our thought and our actions we determine ourselves and the world, both stimulating and responding to them and, in consequence, determining how the world responds to us. If this is true, then we are not passive objects with fixed characteristics and minds as we are sometimes presented to us in psychology. Rather, we are active and dynamic and are shaped in important ways by our environments and experiences.

Q: Can't get border to the element I don't know what I am missing but cannot get the border to the element. It's the yellow box in the image. I have tried padding in multiple places but it makes no difference. What is the thing I am missing? .box { display: block; width: 100px; height: 100px; border: 1px solid black; } add a border A: It is just a display issue of the element, not a CSS issue. .box { display: inline-block; width: 100px; height: 100px; border: 1px solid black; } A: The problem was that the border was in the same DIV as the text. However that is a display problem rather than a CSS problem. Adding the border to a different DIV, which is then set to 100% height and width, makes it display like you need it to. .first { display: block; width: 100%; height: 100px; padding: 5px; border: 1px solid black; } add a border Q: How to get started with a CLI interface? I'm a PHP developer who
