A Little Bit About Me You know about my day to day. I am a stay-at-home-mom of a two and half year old, and a wife of a wonderful husband of ten years. This blog is about my crafty adventures, my life with my sweetie, and how our young family embraces the Everyman approach to life. Cookies April 14, 2007 A big thank you to everyone who has already mailed their bits in for our Baby Tree. We are less than one week away from wrapping up the whole project, and we can't thank you enough. One of the most fantastic things about this project is getting to meet so many wonderful people through it all. You've donated at the garage sale, volunteered, sent in a letter and now you are helping us spread the word about other people and raising funds in return. On that note, I wanted to remind everyone that we still have a couple weeks left in our festivities. Click here to find out more and start your shopping today! 5 comments: Thanks for your great tips. i have a manual leaf blower. My question is I bought a cub, great buy $25.00 from a safeway. It is a range. I checked it and found it had no inverter. How do I get one? This is so embarrassing. thanks. You don't have to buy something that's not made for the range. I have a 2002 model (Cub is the brand, not to be confused with a Cub Cadet) that's still in perfect shape. They were made by the same manufacturer that sold the Little Jimmy brand, you know, that Little Tikes action figure. The main difference is the mounting brackets in the cub and the cub had a power switch, a thermostat, and 1/8" inlet and outlet tubes. The Leafman had 2 1/2" inlet and outlet tubes. If you don't find the power switch in the box, just write it down as it is the most important part of the model. The only issue I have with my cub is that it doesn't have a thermostat. With my other cordless model, I leave it on 24/7, because it started running around the house when I wasn't even using it. Do you think this will work with my leaf blower? I just want it to turn on when the machine switches it on
