Intentional misanthropy has often been presented as a self-defeating strategy, but one must ask: How self-defeating is it? If the world is a bad place, then perhaps misanthropists have been right to throw in their lot with the world. Or is it simply a question of despair? The fate of the misanthropist depends on whether the world is a good or bad place. So when I speak of Islam, I have no intention of describing what in fact I believe to be a wholly alien form of thought. I speak of Islam as it is presently understood. Islamism is in fact the most bloodthirsty and bestial of all the world's religions. I cannot recall an event in which a Muslim has killed someone and not asked afterwards, "Did God command you to do it?" This is like asking whether a believer in Hinduism would have killed the secularist French philosopher 1cdb36666d
