1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method for controlling a plurality of pipelines. More particularly, the present invention relates to a method for controlling a plurality of pipelines in a connected serial electronic device to decrease a total current consumption of the connected serial electronic device. 2. Description of the Related Art With continuously development of electronic technology and electronic devices, the functions of the electronic devices are increasing and it is getting more and more important to efficiently and appropriately control the electronic devices. For example, for a display panel of a notebook computer, the number of the pipelines connected to the display panel is increasing; accordingly, the pipe for supplying the power to the pipelines is increased, so that the total current consumption of the display panel is increased and a power consumption problem of the notebook computer is caused. Conventional methods for solving the problem of the power consumption include reducing the number of the pipelines and reducing the total current consumption. In the conventional method, for example, the number of the pipelines of a display panel is decreased or the pipelines are shifted by a method of connecting the pipelines in serial so as to decrease the total current consumption of the display panel. FIG. 1 is a block diagram of a conventional pipeline serial control method. Referring to FIG. 1, a conventional pipeline serial control method comprises a pipeline topology 10 and a pipeline controller 12. The pipeline topology 10 comprises two or more pipelines P1-P12. The pipeline controller 12 comprises a current sensor 14 for sensing a total current consumption of the pipeline topology 10. The method is to sense the total current consumption of the pipelines P1-P12 by the current sensor 14, to correct the total current consumption according to a total resistance of the pipelines P1-P12 and a sensing value of the current sensor 14, and to correct the total current consumption to a predetermined value. The pipelines P1-P12 are connected in serial by a serial-parallel converter 16. A correction signal is output from the pipeline controller 12 to the serial-parallel converter 16. FIG. 2 is a block diagram of another conventional pipeline serial control method. Referring to FIG. 2, a conventional pipeline serial control method comprises a pipeline topology 20 and a pipeline controller 22. The pipeline topology 20 comprises two or more pipelines P1-P14. The pipeline controller 22 comprises two or more current sensors 24-30, a multiplier 32 for multiplying the number of the current sensors 24-30 by the resistance value of the pipelines P1

Avalanches are pyroclastic flows. An avalanche is characterized by rapid, explosive displacement of blocks of rock, which travel at high speeds and can flow down slopes as long as 50 to 100 feet (15 to 30 m). Avalanches carry a wealth of buried hazards, such as geologic structures, and are the source for land slides, surface cracks, and rockfalls. Avalanche conditions can typically be observed by noting changing wind direction and patterns, changes in snow color, altered surface temperature, and surface avalanches and winds. An avalanche that is triggered by strong, heavy precipitation is called an avalanche hazard. An avalanche hazard is further divided into small-scale (less than 10 acres) and large-scale (more than 10 acres). Weak thaw avalanches are typically small-scale and can be difficult to detect. Ice avalanches that are triggered by cold temperatures are typically small-scale. Wind-induced avalanches that are triggered by strong winds are typically large-scale. Large-scale avalanches frequently initiate into pyroclastic flows. Process: Avalanche conditions often change over the course of a day, and are often more complex than a single trigger event. They are complicated by the fact that avalanches can be triggered by a large number of factors such as wind, temperature, and precipitation, which frequently interact with one another. An avalanche hazard is formed from the combination of factors and triggers that initiate the avalanche, as well as any natural or human-induced factors that influence the avalanche.British authorities have opened a murder investigation following the death of a highly respected genealogist — a woman who has taken the UK by storm with her research into the mother of a royal family member. The Scotland Yard confirmed on Wednesday that it was investigating the death of Joan Vevers, 72, whose work has revealed some of the key details about Queen Elizabeth II's mother, Princess Margaret. Ms. Vevers died on Tuesday at a London hotel where she was staying with her daughter, writer and journalist Anna King-Smollett, who was on a trip to London. The prime suspect in her murder, a man named Ian Shand, was arrested in connection with the death. "Detectives are now working to establish the full circumstances of Ms. Vevers' death and a post-mortem examination was carried out on Wednesday morning," the Metropolitan Police said in a statement.Q: Angular 4 Webpack Html
