surprise. We found that Alabama’s public school system was suffering from a growing sense of disconnect. Students lack confidence in their teachers and principals, while some administrators struggle to focus on student achievement.

Unfortunately, we found that the more isolated an administrator feels the more their attitudes seep into the schools they lead. We wanted to know, is this happening anywhere else? So we decided to do a nationwide study to see if our school observations were isolated to the Deep South. In short, the results were eye-opening. I will briefly outline the methods and findings, but you can read the entire paper here. Methods We first surveyed 3,069 middle and high school principals. We specifically asked about the characteristics of their school’s CSAs (Curriculum & Standards Advisory Committees). These CSAs are made up of community members and make up the administrative policy-making body at a school. We also asked the principals to rate how disengaged they felt in terms of “taking care of my school and students”, and how connected they felt to

Apache.A new Atlanta Falcons' offensive line On Wednesday, the Atlanta Falcons finally took the podium at the podium. And what a podium it is. The podium of the five largest television networks. Yes, the Falcons finally shared their offseason plans. Now, they have finally shared their plans with the fans. At a press conference Wednesday afternoon, Falcons owner Arthur Blank laid out his plan for the offensive line. And what a plan it is. It's a complete and total overhaul. Blank bought the team for $200 million and has now invested close to $250 million. It is easy to see the love Blank has for the team. But it is also easy to see he is growing tired of the way things are, and he is ready for a change. Atlanta's offensive line issues Since the start of the 2010 season, the Atlanta Falcons have relied on a mish-mash of offensive linemen. The double-headed monster of Joe Hawley and Mike Taylor played in all but two games. Over the past three seasons, the team has replaced two starting left tackles. The rookie, Jake Matthews, has yet to play. The veteran, Taylor, has become more and more of a liability and has been phased out of the lineup as of late. In the meantime, the Falcons have decided to fire both head coaches. A new offensive line coach and a new offensive line. And this new offensive line won't be playing the same kind of offense. Signs of a new offensive line Hawley is gone. He and Taylor split time at left tackle, but Hawley was considered the more consistent of the two. His replacement, Taylor, is gone too. He will be moving on to the Indianapolis Colts, and it is a perfect fit. Taylor has been terrible since the Falcons switched to the zone-blocking style of offense.

The Falcons signed Smith and Ballard to serve as the starting tackles, but they are also gone. They each signed with the Philadelphia Eagles, and Ballard is looking to revitalize his career. The Eagles couldn't wait to trade him
