E-Manage-GPS-SV5-Max-Steel-Turn.pdf.Threat Analysis: The Leveraged Buyouts That Are Angering Dealmakers Leveraged buyouts, in which private equity firms borrow cash to buy a company and then reduce its debt through a combination of issuing new debt and buying back shares, are increasingly replacing leveraged buyouts. The latest sector to be under pressure is the biotechnology industry, where a planned buyout of the point-of-care diagnostics company Transcend Genomics by Wellcome Precision Therapeutics fell apart last week, but many others have hit financial problems. Bikram Datt, partner at SR&J, a law firm that specialises in private equity, says the leveraged buyout market is declining as firms focus on acquiring companies with strong balance sheets. And that means that buyout firms are not as active in the same kinds of markets as they were a few years ago, Datt said. He suggested that the industry had been so focused on the financial return on investment of its acquisitions that it had neglected a core focus of private equity: corporate repositioning. "There's been a lot of activity in the last few years, but the way that we've done it has been more of a financial play in a market that's less liquid," said Datt. "We've moved away from the more organic type of strategy where we've moved away from the number of transactions." The idea of buyouts as a surefire way of increasing a company's value, by reducing its debt and issuing new shares, is not simply a theory, but it has driven much of the activity in the sector for the last decade. It became clear in 2004 that the combination of securitisation and the global financial crisis had changed the dynamics of the buyout market. Buyouts were becoming one of the most common ways for private equity firms to raise capital, and d0c515b9f4
