that they would be putting a little too much thought into a simple holiday, Kelly was not only managing to plan a successful wedding day but maintaining her sanity too! She found a wonderful church (and one full of surprises!), she designed her wedding dress herself (with her mom), she even planned her own honeymoon (meeting her husband at the airport!). Plus, she made sure to include her mom in the wedding, so that it was all properly planned and it was special for her to have the wedding that she always wanted. And, of course, she's so cute with her hubby in their wedding photos, we can't help but love Kelly and Mark. We wish them a happy marriage filled with lots of love! At least she isn't wearing pink...that way it makes it all the more adorable!Q: How to see if a jquery plugin is being used by my site (drupal)? I want to know if

BUENOS AIRES/MEXICO CITY (Reuters) - Argentina, which has blocked American beef for decades, could be preparing for a taste of its own medicine with import taxes of up to 50 percent that could make its export of cattle, meat and leather nearly impossible. FILE PHOTO: An Argentinian vendor passes boxes of Argentine beef at a supermarket in Guatemala City, Guatemala, August 12, 2017. REUTERS/Josue Decamp The South American country, which has threatened to slap higher taxes on U.S. beef, could increase its taxes to 50 percent on imported animal products, said Andres Cabello, head of the National Chamber of Meat Exporters, in an interview with Reuters. Argentina exported 635 million pounds (284.9 million kg) of beef to the United States in the first five months of this year, compared with 930 million pounds (428.2 million kg) in the same period last year. The United States bought more Argentine beef than any other country. "We'll have to see if what the government is doing to the cattle will lead to higher prices," said Cabello, who complained that Argentine producers of cattle were "unfairly" hit by U.S. import taxes. "I don't think that Argentina will have them at 50 percent," he said. The White House said on Wednesday it would not comment on its beef import strategy in Argentina. Argentina in August slashed tariffs and other barriers to U.S. beef for two years, conditional on the United States lifting those on beef from other nations, including Brazil.

That measure expires on Oct. 1, but Argentine officials are considering reinstating the tariffs, according to industry insiders and people familiar with internal government discussions. Argentina has also banned U.S. beef since 1992, in part for fears that the country's beef is contaminated with a contagious and life-threatening bacteria that was not found in the United States. The ban was lifted in 2015. After last year's increase in U.S. duties, Argentina restricted imports of some categories of cattle, hides and meat. But the restrictions have slowed as the Argentine cattle industry has largely recovered from years of herd culling to combat mad cow disease. Last year,

Argentina sold beef to the United States at a record high of 23 million pounds and exported
