but this year, things are changing. theyre getting bad. and we think that we can save them. theres a lot of competition for the students now and youre going to have to be the best. so i think that we need to look for people who have the most leadership skills and the most social skills. and who also can think critically and solve real-world problems and build digital mastery. our students are really good at many things. we have over 1,000 students in our program. and about 75 percent of our students are underrepresented minorities. and when they come here, i think they have a lot of gaps to close. but they have really good brains and they have really good attitudes and a lot of passion and a lot of motivation, and they love this school. and so they do really well in our program, and they are really great at all kinds of things. so we just need to find out what they are good at. we need to find out what they are passionate about. we need to find out what they love to learn. and then we can teach them how to apply that to the real world. but i think that what quest is going to be able to do this year is to look for students who are really passionate about doing things, and who are really passionate about making things better. and who are really passionate about making things relevant. and really passionate about making things impactful. and really passionate about using their knowledge and skills to create positive change in the world. so we have a program where we are going to interview every single student that comes here. punit malhotra: we live in a world where humor has to be safe. you cannot be daring and not face the consequences. so that was an interesting challenge. there was always a risk, and you do it with a certain amount of confidence. so it was interesting because it was a completely new journey for me. and it was also a good opportunity to show what i could do. so i was a good teacher. i got the best students i could possibly get, because i knew that was going to make them grow.

in july 2011, google announced that a paid service, called youtube red, had been launched. the service provides a paid subscription for access to "youtube premium" videos, which can be viewed offline, and videos from partners with exclusive content. the service also provides ad-free viewing and the ability to download videos. in november 2015, youtube announced that it would no longer support flash on its platform. since then, the video player supports html5 video with the ability to download videos. [96] however, videos without the html5 player can still be downloaded. in november 2013, youtube added the ability to download videos directly from the site, after testing it since july 2010. previously, videos could be downloaded from other sites, such as hulu plus and dailymotion, or from partner sites, such as amazon's instant video and vimeo. [97] youtube's "download" option is hidden by default, but can be enabled by users in the settings menu or by clicking the "options" link in the top-right corner of a video page. [98] the ability to download videos from the site was introduced in february 2010, along with a "download" option that required viewing the video through youtube itself. in june 2010, when google reader was discontinued, youtube removed the ability to download videos from the site. [99] since the introduction of the download feature, youtube has allowed third-party web sites to offer their own download services for videos. for example, videos can be downloaded from amazon's instant video. other companies have developed their own services. for example, vimeo has a paid subscription-based video download service called vimeo on demand. 5ec8ef588b
